For 125 years, Le Cordon Bleu has remained true to what it set out to achieve – the promotion of French culture, cuisine, gastronomy, and intercultural exchange. It has played a role in social progress, supporting women to take a more prominent role in the culinary arts industry, and standing up for the social rights of chefs.

Le Cordon Bleu first came to the world’s attention in 1895 when its magazine La Cuisinière Cordon Bleu (by French journalist Marthe Distel) became a global sensation.
For 70 years, the magazine showcased the art of French cooking, delighting culinary professionals and enthusiasts with detailed recipes for haute cuisine dishes. The popularity of the magazine led to the first Le Cordon Bleu cooking school opening in Paris (1896), followed by London (1931), then New York (1942).

In 1984, M. André Cointreau acquired Le Cordon Bleu, expanding its reputation as a leading culinary arts and hospitality management institute throughout the globe.

Today, Le Cordon Bleu is an iconic institution with an international network of 35 schools in 20 countries, and 20,000 students annually from 130 nationalities. Many celebrities in the culinary world - Julia Child, Giada De Laurentiis, Yotam Ottolenghi, Mary Berry, and Gaston Acurio - are proud Le Cordon Bleu alumni.

In 2020, Le Cordon Bleu marks its 125th year anniversary with an international calendar of activities, culinary competitions, and industry events celebrating a bright future, while honoring a rich past.
“Le Cordon Bleu fed my passion. I loved it so much. The multiculturalism of teachers and students really appealed to me.”
CELEBRATING OUR ALUMNI

For 125 years, Le Cordon Bleu has celebrated the exceptional talent of its alumni. Many alumni, like Julia Child, Gaston Acurio, and Rachel Khoo, have achieved celebrity status as TV chefs, culinary authors and restaurateurs, while others quietly uphold excellence every day in their professional lives.

Graduates receive membership to our international Alumni Association with lifelong connection to our global network of accomplished alumni and industry partners.
